

PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY
HISTORIC SITE SUMMARY SHEET

Survey #: P.G. #87B-2 Building Date: early 19th to early 20th c.
Building Name: Somerville-Turner Farm and Outbuildings
Location: 21110 Aquasco Road , Aquasco, Md.

Private/Residence-Agricultural/Occupied/Good-Deteriorated/Inaccessible

Description

The Somerville Farm consists of a complex of buildings set back to the east of the Aquasco Road. The house is a two-and-one-half-story frame structure, large and square, with a pyramidal roof. Entrance is in the central bay of the three-bay north facade; across this facade is a one-story porch supported by six Tuscan columns. There is a complex of outbuildings to the south and west of the house. Directly south is a small (ca. 12' square) meathouse, sided with a combination of horizontal board and German siding. Further south there is a long shed. Southwest of the house is the oldest of the outbuildings, a two-story gable-front stable or carriage house. This building rests on a sill of heavy hand-hewn timbers, joined with mortise and tenon; the rafters are hand-hewn, and the roof is covered with wooden shake. The siding is wide hand-split horizontal board. West of the house are three more outbuildings: a modern garage, a gable-roofed barn and a concrete-block garage.

Significance

The buildings at the Somerville Farm (Greenwood) represent several different eras, from the early nineteenth century to the early twentieth century. The oldest surviving building is the carriage-house/stable which dates from the early nineteenth century when this was the property of Thomas T. Somerville. Somerville's son sold this plantation in 1863 to William Barker of Woodville, who in 1866 devised it to his nephew and niece Jane and William Turner. It remained in the Turner family until 1980. The old Somerville house burned early in this century, and was replaced by the present house circa 1910; it has many features of the popular "four-square" pyramidal-roof house style. Greenwood Farm is part of the large tract Brook Court Manor, one of the oldest tracts in Prince George's County. Farmed for nearly two centuries by the Somervilles and the Turners, it is today still a large working farm.

#7.

The Somerville Farm consists of a complex of buildings set back to the east of the Aquasco Road and accessible by a long unpaved lane. The farm is on flat open land, presently cultivated.

The house is a two-and-one-half-story frame structure, large and square, with a pyramidal roof. Entrance is in the central bay of the three-bay north facade through a door with three-pane transom and three-pane sidelights. There is a dentilled frieze above the door. Across the north facade is a one-story porch supported by six Tuscan columns. There are dormers in the north, east and west planes of the roof. Two chimneys flank the dormer on the east plane of the roof, and a third adjoins the dormer on the west. There are two projecting semi-octagonal bays on the west facade of the house. The building rests on a high foundation, brick on the north half of the house, and concrete block on the south. The siding also varies: the north section of the house is sided with plain weatherboard, while the south has German siding, all painted white. The roof is of red asphalt shingle.

There is a complex of outbuildings to the south and west of the house. Directly south is a small (ca. 12' square) meathouse, sided with a combination of horizontal board and German siding, all circular-sawn. It rests on a brick foundation, replaced in some spots with concrete block. Its gable roof is of standing seam tin. Further south there is a long shed-roof shed which rests on concrete blocks.

Southwest of the house is the oldest of the outbuildings, a two-story gable-front stable or carriage house. This building rests on a sill of heavy hand-hewn timbers, joined with mortise and tenon. The rafters also are hand-hewn, and the roof is covered with wooden shake. The siding is wide hand-split horizontal board. A wide door takes up most of the north-east gable end, and above the door is a long horizontal opening, formed by heavy timber sill and lintel, and six vertical support posts. The building is in ruinous condition: a southeast shed wing with corrugated metal roof has collapsed.

West of the house are three more outbuildings. Nearest the house is a (modern) frame two-car garage, with tin roof. Beyond it to the west is a tall gable-roofed barn, with wide vertical siding, some of which is hand cut and some sawn. The interior members are a mixture of hand-hewn joists and circular sawn posts and rafters. The building has a standing seam metal roof. North of this barn is a four-bay garage constructed of concrete blocks.

The building at the Somerville Farm (Greenwood) represents several different eras, from the early nineteenth century to the early twentieth century. The oldest surviving building is the carriage-house/stable which dates from the early nineteenth century when this was the property of Thomas T. Somerville. (The corn crib described in the 1974 survey is no longer standing.) Thomas Somerville's son sold this plantation in 1863 to William Barker of Woodville, who in 1866 devised it to his nephew and niece Jane and William Turner.¹ It remained in the Turner family until 1980.

The old Somerville house is reported to have burned early in this century. The house which replaced it was probably built circa 1910; it has many features of the popular "four-square" pyramidal-roof house style.

Greenwood Farm is part of the large tract Brook Court Manor, one of the oldest tracts in Prince George's County. Farmed for nearly two centuries by the Somervilles and the Turners, it is today still a large working farm.

The two-story, frame farmhouse at this site is not particularly old-probably ca. 1900. However, the outbuildings appear to pre-date it. These consist of a corn crib and a stable. The corn crib sits on brick piers, and has a braced, hewn frame, with wooden slats on the open section and rough split weatherboards on the enclosed part. The old, wood-shingle roof has partially collapsed. Nearby is the stable-shewn-frame building, covered with split siding and having a drive-in opening on the gabled facade. Shed-roof wing is on the south side.
